Featured Project

A prominent private foundation has developed a national model for comprehensive early childhood development services that promote early success and school readiness, and has implemented this model in cities around the country, ensuring that at-risk infants, toddlers, and preschoolers have access to high quality educational opportunities. In the city of Milwaukee, the model has been implemented through an innovative public-private collaboration.

The Challenge

The foundation wished to evaluate the operational effectiveness of the model, and create a plan for long-term sustainability for the model and for the collaborative partnership. This was made more urgent by a change in public funding of the program, which made it necessary to identify and engage new funding sources.

The Legacy Group Execution

The Legacy Group created and implemented an evaluation plan to clarify the objectives of the collaboration and identify a working operation model that would bring both organizations in alignment with the objectives of the collaboration.

The evaluation process included:

- A comprehensive audit of both organizations using in-depth interviews, observational research, analysis of formal and informal networks within the organizations, secondary research of other collaborative structures.
- Convening a planning team comprised of internal and external stakeholders to review audit findings and provide input and oversight for the development of a long-term sustainability plan.
- Recommendations to restructure the agreement governing the collaboration to bring it into greater alignment with the strategic objectives of the collaborative partners.
- Development of an action plan for implementing changes in planning, marketing, operations, and communications practices that would better support the collaboration.

The Legacy Group Impact

As a result of The Legacy Group's work, the foundation has a renewed model for how the collaboration will work in the future, including:

- A new collaborative model which creates a framework for additional partners to help ensure the long-term sustainability of the educational model.
- A renewed commitment from all partners to greater cooperation and success.
- A strategic roadmap to implement practices which will enhance the educational mode.
- New support for the collaboration within board and staff leadership.
- New and strengthened relationships with community stakeholders and potential funders.
